Council should have the Estimates in their arisen upon this subject, seeing how empha. British shipping." tically the Secretary of State for the Colonies has, upon repeated occasions, recognised the full right of the non-official members, as representatives of the public, to lat other seasons it is largely imported. Colonies, the principle that the public who pay than once pointed out a want of regularity. in regard to financial matters, both here whether the Report he forwards includes or and in Singapore. There can be no doubt, excludes treasure. therefore, that the desire of the non-official members to have reasonable time for studying the accounts will be at once complied with, should the matter be referred to the Colonial Office.

The complaints which have been made have not been without very good cause. By the plan hitherto adopted, the official members have been placed at a very great, advantage over the non-official members, in the discussion of the Estimates. The Estimates are in preparation perhaps for three months before they are finally decided upon. During that period, the officials are able to make themselves acquainted with every detail, and have thus an admirable start over the nonofficials, even if the latter received the accounts in reasonable time before the meeting. The advantage thus gained is greatly enhanced by the explanatory address orwishes to be adopted, is set forth at once, with scarcely a chance of its being refuted, £6.347.139! With, however, the good sense which usually characterizes his action under such circumstances, he refrained from pushing for- The fact is, no reliable statistics of the China dorsed, so that they be not taken again. ward the matter of the explanation, but he nevertheless insisted that the bill for passing to its trade returns—and that Mr. Hart too the Estimates should be read for the first time, and that they should be brought on the title of his paper to the "open ports." and for discussion on a week's adjournment.

The chief ground which was alleged for they should arrive home in time for the SECRETARY OF STATE to peruse them, and return them before the commencement of the Hongkong financial year. That the Estimates, thus finally approved, should be in band at that time is beyond dispute; but we venture to think that it a excellent reason for lower grades of Congou was looked for:

printing the Estimates, say, a fortnight or three weeks sooner, but a very bad reason for refusing to the non-official members due opportunity for their investigation. If there is any necessity for the haste which the Acting Colonial-Secretary urged as a reason for hurrying through the Estimates those who have been charged with their preparation are called upon to explain the delay which has taken place. would at least have been courteons that a few words should have been said upon this point, which clearly underlies the whole difficulty. But instead of this, it is to be regretted that the Acting Colonial-Secre-TARY seized upon the idea of bantering the non-official members would not look into them for a couple of hours, was no less contrary to fact than opposed to courtesy and

MY BOOKS. WALTER WHITE. 'Oh Phow sweet when I come home To see around me many a tome; Here to revel, there to muse, Glenn or wander as I choose. One or two-so seems to me-Throb with echoes from the sea: And in some my sense perceives The harmony of forest leaves; Here is one—a bosom book— That hibbles like a mountain brook;

Another yet is gorgeous, still, As subset on a distant hill. Endless landscapes cross my room, Fancy lecked in twilight gloom ; Autumn, Winter, Summer, Spring. Widard books, ye changeful bring! Something apt for each emotion, Love, or gladness, or devotion : Ye to me, instead of wife. Instead of child-are second life. -Ye at will give up your knowledge Such as may befit a college, Tortured into rigid rules, Vexed with learning of the schools:

Or reproffer information With an easy salutation, As thought meant, with purpose sly l'o ynt one off till by and by, And leave me, after all endeavour, In doubt of what is wise and olever. Some of ye are as a stream In whose depths rare jewels gleam; Happy he who kneels to drink Leaning o'er the steepy brink. Catching through the current's flow Flashes from the gems below. Admonishers of strife and folly, Cheerers of black melancholy, Gentle, most persuasive Teachers. Or authoritative Preachers : Companions full of life and spirit, Mentors who some gradge inherit; Sometimes full of queerest fancies Vague as Jack-o'-luntern dances : Other while ye are as prim As Quakers neut, sedate and trim. Three or four are jolly fellows Whom Time furtifies and mellows; Some make protentions to be witty. Others chant a stirring ditty: Suiting every time and season With a rhyme or with a reason. Books, beloved ye are to me An unretorting family : Ye for each day's irritation Always bring a compensation. How shall endness come or gloom, While we lie about my room, Looking down from friendly nooks My benison upon ye, Books!

COLD MUTTON ON THE

MOUNTAINS. On we go, and the trudging becomes terrible labour; until; at last, Peter cries, "Courage! one effort more, and we are, or the arete!" How the prospect of a goal picks you up! The effort is made, and we pause at the commencement of the arete Here we dine, lying down on some rocks of the Italian side. By the way, I wish heartily that some competent member of the Alpine Club would direct his benevolent attention to the subject of the food to be consumed the mountaineer on high excursions. present the food issued for that purpose hotels seems to be the most inedible and unenjoyable provender that could be devised for such occasions. We have cold muttontough, dry, stringy, tasteless; we have coarse Emmentbaler cheese, and singularly dry bread. Now the mouth is apt to get dry after such a climb as we have just had, and the food ought to be moist and palatable. With difficulty and disgust we chew weard the dry-as-dust provisions we have, and determine to serve dimbing humanity by bringing this momentous subject forcibly before the Alpine authorities. We have bottle of common red wine, and we reserve one bottle of champagne for the peak. As we lie on the rock dining, we look down dizzy vertical height, and watch the delicate silvery white of the great Lyskamm as a filmy vapour of fine cloud sweeps airily between us and it. HOW RIZA KOOLI KHAN'S EYES WERE PUT OUT.

Riza Kooli Khau, the Governor of Kazeroon, came to pay the Elchee a visit. This old nobleman had a silk band over his evesockets, having had his eyes put out during the late contest between the Zend and Kajir families for the throne of Persia. He began. soon after he was seated, to relate his misfertunes, and the tears actually came to my eyes at the thoughts of the old man's sufferings, when, judge of my surprise to find it was to entertain, not to distress us, he was giving the narration, and that, in spite of the revolting subject, I was compelled to smile ! at a tale, which in any country except Persia. would have been deemed a subject for a tragedy: but as poisons may by use become aliment, so misfortunes, however dreadful, when they are of daily occurrence, appear like common events of life. But it was the manner and feelings of the narrator that, in been too active a partisan," said Riza Kooli Khan, "of the Kajir family, to expect much mercy when I fell into the hands of the rascondemned me to lose my eyes. A stout sentence: he had in his hand a large blust i knife, which he meant to make his instrument. I offered him twenty tomans if he would use a penkuife I showed him. He refused in the most brutal manner, called me a merciless villain, asserting that I had slain his brother, and that he had solicited the present office to gratify his revenge, adding, his only regret was not being allowed to put me to death. Seeing," continued Riza Kooli, "that I had no tenderness to look for from this fellow, I pretended submission, and laid myself on my back; he seemed quite pleased. tucked up his sleeves, brandished his knife. and very composedly put one knee on my chest, and was proceeding to his butchering work, as if I had been a stupid innocent what he chose. Observing him, from this impression, off his guard, I raised one of my feet, and planting it on the pit of his stomach, sent him heels over head in a way that would have made you laugh (imitating with his foot the action be described, and laughing heartily himself at the recollection of it). I sprung up; so did my enemy; we had a short tussle—but he was the stronger: and having knocked me down, succeeded in taking out my eyes. The pain at the moment," said the old Khan, " was lessened by the warmth occasioned by the struggle. The wounds soon healed; and when the Kajirs obtained the undisputed sovereignty of Persia, I was rewarded for my suffering in their cause. All my sons have been promoted, and I am Governor of this town and province. Here I am in affluence, and enjoying a repose to which men who can see are Longfellow, that he will ever hold a foremest in this country perfect strangers. Devey, M.A. alleged cause for which another governor would be removed, beaten, or put to death, the King says, 'Never mind, it is poor blind Riza Kooli; let him alone.' So you observe, Elchee, that I have no reason to complain, being, in fact, better defended from mistertune by the loss of my two eyes than I could be by the possession of twenty of the clearest in Persia?" and he laughed again at this second joke.—From, "Sketches in Persia," by to apply at his Shop. Sir John Malcolm.

WOMAN'S WORK. Nature herself, then, has disqualified women from fighting and from entering into the fierce contentions of the prickly and crooked ways of politics. There is a silent and beauti ful education which heaven intended that all alike should learn from mothers, sisters, and wives. Each home was meant to have in their gentler presence a softening andrefining element, so that strength should train itself to be submissive, rudeness should become abashed, and course passions held in check by the natural influence of women. High or low, educated or uneducated, there is the proper work of the weaker sox. And, finally, we venture to address her in the words of Lord Lyttelton:-

"Seek to be good, but aim not to be great; A woman's noblest station is retreat: Her fairest virtues fly from public sight; Domestic worth-that shuns too strong a light. -From " Political Women."

WHAT IS IN A PIECE OF WOOD. We now part with our "old violins" with feelings not unmingled with regret; the very sums of money given for them bear witness upon insurances effected with this Company. to their strange indefinite value and importanco-300 guineas is a common price for a fine Stradinarius. The owner of the "Messie " refused 600 guiness for that unique gem, whilst 800 and even 1,000 guineas have been offered by some who could not get their favorites for less. Fifteen hundred acres of land in Cincinnati were on one occasion given for a Stainer; and as the city of Pittsburg is now built upon that land, we may confidently say that this has turned out to be the heaviest price ever paid for a violin. And what is it that we pay for? A little wood, varnish, paint-a few shillings would buy all the materials: the simplest mechanical knowledge is sufficient to cut up and put together the common fiddle, which is now sold for ten or fifteen shillings, and looks to the novice so much more desirable than the "Messie," or "Pucelle," though not unlike them. Then what do we pay for? We pay for what no money can produce again; we pay for conditions that have passed away; we pay for the inspiration of a matchless workman, and subtle soul infused into elements which seem beggarly, but have become priceless; we pay for the concentrated experience not one life, but many, put into a curve or a fluting-for a few thin plates of wood fixed together with an instinct that is dead, but that ere it died made those slips of wood almost a living organism—in some respects more than a living organism, because im- Above 6 months the full annual rate. mortal. The violin is the only fossil that still lives, and lives with a fulness of life and freshness that contrasts mysteriously enough with the failing, sickly, and withering generations of man. Even should mishaps bruise or break its beauty it can be tice viz:endlessly restored—it is never fit for death; Detwhed and semi-detached) it survives a thousand calamities; nay, even when cut up, dismembered, its several parts scattered through a dozen workshops and through 500 years, it lives on with a kind of metempsychosis in new forms, and still clings strangely to its individuality, so that men taking up a patchwork violin, say-it is fine, the front is poor, the head is tame; but then, see, here is a Stradiuarius back. Thus human in its power and pathos, and superhuman in its immortal fabric, the violin reigns the prince of all instruments, and in the hands of a Paganini or a Joachin, the joy and wonder of the civilised world, -"Old Violins," by H. LONGFELLOW.

After Tennyson, Longfellow has been the

must be lost; it is late, and we have the past reputation, he still maintains that distinction. There even are not wanting people who prefer him to the Laureate. He has certainly written a melodrama and a bucolic idyll equal to, if not above, anything of the same sort that Tennyson has, or probably could, accomplish. He has written many minor pieces which can hardly be rivalled for Underwriting Business pro rata to amount of Oswingo the combination of exquisite grace and fancy | premium contributed. which they exhibit. But here Longfellow's superiority ends. Had Tennyson not written the "Idylls" or the "In Memoriam," his inferiority to his contemporary would have been manifest. But the power Tenny son displays, in these superior walks of his art, places him above any living contemporary. Longfellow's range is purely objective. He never attempts elegy, and if he did would probably fail in it. In the elements necessary for the execution of a heroic poem, Longfellow is equally wanting. He lacks the power of depicting deep passion, or robing purely imaginary subjects with ideal grace and splendour. All his characters areof the earth, thought his heroines invariably reflect in their mien the hues of heaven. Taking, therefore, Longfellow's excellencies this instance, gave the comic effect to the in conjunction with his defects, considering tragedy of which he was the hero :- "I had his pictorial power, his command of the emofitional sympathies, his sparkling fancy, his comprehensive catholic spirit, the air of novelty he has imparted to mediaval ideas. cally tribe of Zend. Nor need Longfellow feel, because he has not the genius of a Shelley or a Milton, that his genius is not likely to be as profitable to mankind. Poets of the first or second-class order generally stir the mind's secret springs too profoundly to be of service to them in a practical point view. They exalt the imagination by scenes of ideal beauty never likely to be realised, and excite the mind to unprofitable yearning for the unattainable.. The passions by them are roused from their depths, and the brain fevered into false creation. The intellectual horizon is extended too often at the expense of the moral element. But by poets of the third order the mental forces are seldom thrown out of their symmetrical relalamb, that was quite content to let him do tionship. Among them are to be found the practical instructors of mankind. They enlighten the judgment, while they warm the heart. By them the elements of human nature are not disturbed by any spiritual electricity from that natural equipoise which springs from their healthy development. ing..... They ripen the intellect and the moral sense simultaneously. They generally keep the passions within the restraints of the reason. By them the domestic virtues are cherished, and morality robed in the garb of a sparkling fancy and a sportive disposition. They babituate us to derive lessons from nature at every step. They train the æsthetic sense within us to extract beauty from commonplace objects, hope from gloom, and sunshine from sorrow. They ripen our affections until they exhale an aroma, which sweetens the atmosphere of life. Among such teachers, it
